Nosetouch Press Publishing Psychological Suspense Gothic Novel, A Moonlit Path of Madness, by Catherine McCarthy

[Chicago] Nosetouch Press is proud to announce that it'll be publishing the gothic psychological suspense novel, A Moonlit Path of Madness by Catherine McCarthy. Set around the turn of the 20th century and opening in Vermont, the story moves to the seaside parish of Newport on the western coast of Wales, where the almost supernatural setting and elements of Welsh folklore combine.

“Part epistolary, A Moonlit Path of Madness tells the story of Grace Morgan, a young woman haunted by events in her past, including a curse that seems to plague her family line,” said McCarthy. “This quiet horror-infused novel explores the insidious way in which fear and trauma wreak havoc on people’s lives and the way mental health issues were so poorly handled in the past.”

“We’re excited to work with Catherine on this novel,” said Dave Neal, editor-in-chief and co-publisher of Nosetouch Press. “We’re big fans of the gothic, and Catherine McCarthy brings the unforgettable atmosphere of Wales fully to the forefront in this book.”

“Nosetouch Press continues to publish quality titles across genres,” said Christine Scott, creative director and co-publisher of Nosetouch Press. “Whether within horror, gothic and folk horror, as well as science fiction and fantasy, we offer books for readers who want captivating stories.”

Nosetouch Press is an independent book publisher tandemly-based in Chicago and Pittsburgh, with a commitment to bringing classical book design and excellent fiction to readers everywhere.
